Ερωτήσεις μαθητών στη συνέντευξη προς τον ομιλητή

- 1. As a researcher, is it considered that the phenomenon of hunger serves some people in order to be continued, if not, how is it possible with the evolution and progress that exists on our planet that thousands of people die of hunger every year?
- 2. After so many years of research and efforts to fight hunger, what is your view about it?
- 3. Which difficulties do you usually face in your project?
- 4. The organization you work with, what are its achievements?
- 5. The organization you cooperate with, in which way does it contribute to reduce hunger?
- 6. What do you think are the reasons for poverty in the world?
- 7. Mr Simon, we would like to ask you, to share some of your experiences on such important trips
- 8. What is the strongest moment through your many travels?
- 9. How do you feel when you help people to alleviate their poverty, hunger or any other problem?
- 10. When you were young, how was your behaviour to poor persons?
- 11. Do you think that if we all try, with the help of many organizations for hunger and poverty, do you think that one day, these phenomena may end?
- 12. How we could help and contribute from our side?
- 13. Did the pandemic influence the phenomenon of the hunger?

Simon Levine is a Research Fellow at the Humanitarian Policy group at ODI, London, where he now worries most about livelihoods, protracted crises and resilience. He worked on a variety of development programmes for NGOs for many years, usually in war and post-war contexts such as Mozambique, Cambodia and Burundi. He then spent nine years living in Uganda, working across Eastern and Central Africa and the Horn of Africa specialising in livelihoods, vulnerability analysis and early response. In Uganda he also developed a passion for land rights, on which he worked extensively. Since returning to England in 2010 to work at ODI, he continues to want the humanitarian system to get fixed and wishes that more research was able to contribute something that actually helped that to happen.
